Re: Marriage of Kin

Dear Mr. Kermisch:

My client will settle her claims against your client for intentional infliction of emotional distress and conversion in the sum of $500,000.00. Please be further advised that my client will agree that your client can have a divorce, and your client shall provide immediately provide to my client a GET with the Rabbi of her choosing.

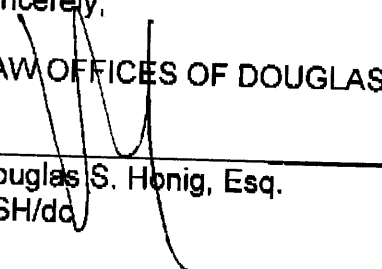

Please be further advised that my client's children will settle their claims against your client for $1,000,000.00. Please also advise your client that from my client's family's perspective, the man has yet to ever be born who can ever compel my client to pay your client a penny for the GET. I think he should try to understand exactly what that means because in your client's dating advertisement, your client suggested that he was looking to win the lottery. Taking records from her children is no way to obtain a winning lottery ticket – it is just the opposite.

Our demand will just increase on a day to day basis. Please govern yourself accordingly.

This offer will remain open for ten (10) days, and the settlement of the children's claims are of course contingent upon Court approval. I do not know if the New York Court will consider the amounts set forth herein as adequate to compensate the children for what he did. Please let me know your position immediately.

Sincerely,
